As of now, I do not recommend this game. The controls are just too clunky. It doesn't register controls instantly, sometimes it doesn't register hops at all, the fire ability thing you have does not always get thrown when you try to throw it, and you can only throw the fire in 3 directions, directly up, directly down, or in a set position. I'm going to keep on playing this game, and if I feel it deserves a positive review, I will change this one.

Definitely not worth $9.99. 1/3 of your time spent on this game will be spent on one screen. The music on the title screen is decent, but for literally the rest of the game there is no music. Not to mention the mindnumbing, brain tumor causing difficulty spike because of the jumping mechanic. Would not kill myself to again.. This game looked promising however quickly it becomes apparent of a regretful purchase. At the game's current state, the controls are very clunky, missed keys while jumping and throwing. The main keys are A D to move back and forth, WS to shoot up or down, SPACE jump and R for fire throwing move. All keys become somewhat unresponsive, making you stuck on clipping paths. The camera sometimes makes it really difficult to see what lies ahead but it doesn't matter because you can charge through enemies and take no damage, the only way I've died over and over is because of sticky controls and falling off a place where I should jump but cannot see due to set camera angles. If graphic mode is on beautiful or fast, it doesn't change the character's lack of facial definition and blurred outlines (the background becomes more defined though). This game would be good at its state if it were in Beta or Alpha but not as a full release just yet, I feel as though the $9.99 pricing is unjustifiable for the game's current state, however if it were to improve with time I would like to make this review a positive one, as the concept of gameplay is enjoyable and it has potential.
