Moreover, there is the danger that a child may run away if left unattended on the front porch. In order to guard against this, it is common to stand the child on the front porch and hold the child's hand until the parent reaches the child. A drawback with this is that in the event the child loses their grip on the parent's hand, the child is on the front porch and thus vulnerable to potential harm. Furthermore, there is the problem that the child may not want to hold the parent's hand. Another manner of protecting children from harm is to provide a conventional stroller and sit the child in 82157476af
